Although typograp hy has always refle cted the cultural p attern of its period. Today's typefaces a nd typographic des ign are a reflection of the past, not of c ontemporary societ y. We must think in terms of our electronic media and contemporary forms of expression. A suggested approach for designing today's typography-based on a cell or unit system-is discussed and illustrated.